

A condo with lovely waterfront views also happens to be located on a busy street. The master bedroom, of modest size, has a single window that opens to these views, but also lets in street light and some noise from the street. A soothing palette of soft golden yellow and rich gray helps create a quiet mood, while the furnishings are designed to maximize the visual space in the room. This includes a shaped, but relatively simple headboard in a solid color, set against a quietly patterned wallpaper.

The window treatment was designed to add dimension to a small, narrow window, with the valance mounted at the ceiling and just clearing the window's upper frame, while the draperies panels are mounted to the outside of the frame. The result helps draw the eye up and out from the undersized window, while a blackout Pirouette shade provides light control and privacy. "The layers of treatments along with the modern shade created a peaceful acoustic element to the private retreat that was very important to the client," said Pamela Holschuh. "They are very happy with the relaxed, refined space where they end their day."
